

First Time and Transfer Students

To be considered for admission into a graduate program at Embry-Riddle, all applicants must have earned a baccalaureate degree from an accredited degree-granting institution. For applicants with educational experience outside of the United States, refer to the International Admissions (<https://catalog.erau.edu/admissions/international-applicants/>) requirements.

Admission into some degree programs may require an applicant to have a higher GPA, meet other special requirements, and/or submit additional documentation. Refer to program specific pages (<https://catalog.erau.edu/admissions/program-criteria/>) for additional requirements. Academic, judicial, and disciplinary notations on transcripts will be reviewed on a case-by-case basis and may impact admission.

To learn more about admission into one of our graduate programs, refer to the admissions requirements for your chosen campus.

Graduate applicants are required to submit the following documentation:

- Application for admission
- Non-refundable application fee
- Official transcript(s) from the accredited degree-conferring institution(s)
- Official or unofficial transcripts from other institutions attended may be requested to verify prerequisite knowledge for certain academic programs
- Official transcripts from all accredited degree-granting institutions showing graduate-level course work, if applicable

Supporting Documents

Admissions documentation may vary by campus and students may be required to submit the following supporting documentation to the respective admissions office.

GMAT/GRE Test Scores

Official test scores may be required for admission consideration into specific programs. Refer to program specific pages for additional details.

- For information on the GRE administration. Please visit this site (<http://www.ets.org/gre>)
- For information on GMAT administration, please visit this site (<http://www.mba.com/>)

Statement of Objectives

A statement of objective helps to demonstrate strong capacity for written communication. The statement should include:

- A description of the applicant's long-term professional goals, defining how Embry-Riddle's program supports those interests and goals
- A description of the applicant's interests and background
- A research topic proposal, if applicable

Letters of Recommendation

Letters of recommendation should consist of academic and professional references. Refer to program specific criteria (<https://catalog.erau.edu/admissions/program-criteria/>) for the number and types of references.

Resume

Submit a current resume outlining your past educational and work experiences.