

Returning Embry-Riddle Students

A new application is required for students who are no longer considered active. To learn more about returning to Embry-Riddle after an absence, refer to the admissions requirements for your chosen campus.

Daytona Beach & Prescott Campus

An Embry-Riddle student whose attendance at the University is interrupted may be required to apply for readmission. In such cases, a new application for admission must be submitted. For more information, refer to the Continuous Enrollment (<https://catalog.erau.edu/academic-policies-and-procedures/continuous-enrollment/>) section of the catalog.

Worldwide & Asia Campus

A new application will be required for students whose attendance at the University is interrupted for any of the following reasons:

- A matriculated student enrolls at another institution
- A matriculated student fails to enroll within one year from the ending date of their last course
- A student fails to matriculate within one year of admission
- A student is academically dismissed from the University
- A student does not complete the degree requirements of a graduate program within seven years from the date of initial enrollment in the graduate program

Prior students with an Embry-Riddle graduate cumulative grade point average (CGPA) below a 3.0 may be considered for readmission. Students must reapply and files will be reviewed by the Admissions Office and/or Academic Standards and Admissions Committee (ASAC). A written petition for readmission, current resume, application fee, and other supporting documentation, if applicable, must accompany the application for consideration of readmission.