

Transfer Students

The University welcomes applicants who have demonstrated success at other institutions of higher education. For purposes of admission, a transfer student is defined as any student who has earned college credit after graduating from high school. Embry-Riddle considers each application for transfer admission individually, reviewing the student's academic record, grades received in all college-level courses and the rigor of the student's academic program. College courses completed as dual enrollment while concurrently enrolled in high school do not qualify applicants as transfer students. For applicants with educational experience outside of the United States, refer to the International Admissions (<https://catalog.erau.edu/admissions/international-applicants/>) requirements.

The University reserves the right to refuse admission to students who are on probationary status or who were academically dismissed from other colleges or universities. The admission decision will be at the discretion of the Director of Admissions and/or the Dean of Enrollment Management and may require review and recommendation from the program chair/coordinator and/or College Dean, if applicable, to admit on a conditional basis.

Transfer applicants must submit the following documentation to be considered for admission:

- Application for admission
- Non-refundable application fee
- Official transcripts from all accredited degree-granting colleges and universities (postsecondary institutions) attended
- Military transcripts and documents, if applicable
- Official high school transcript, or equivalent (GED®, HiSET®, or TASC®) may be required
