Undergraduate Student Taking Graduate Course

During their senior year, Embry-Riddle undergraduate students may take selected Embry-Riddle master's courses, normally 500-level, for credit toward their undergraduate or master's degree. Students must have earned at least 75 semester hours applicable to their undergraduate degree, have the approval of the program coordinator of the appropriate master's program, and have at least a 3.0 CGPA to qualify for enrollment in master's courses while an undergraduate. Credits earned at the 500 level normally can be applied either to undergraduate or master's degree requirements as designated by the student. Once approved, the designation by the student becomes permanent and may not be changed at a later date. An undergraduate student may not enroll in more than 12 credit hours of graduate courses prior to completion of the bachelor's degree and admission to a graduate degree program.
